Informed Care:

Informed care consists of educational materials that assist plan members in identifying certain at risk conditions, and in providing information about healthy lifestyle decisions.

Many employers use informed care materials to focus in on specific health conditions that are pervasive in their employee population.

Supplying plan members with materials that specifically address their health conditions prove to be cost effective. Every dollar spent on informed care materials (when properly targeted) yields an average of $2 return.

Informed care materials can be used as a stand-alone program to address a variety of topics, or part of a bigger program orchestrated with the health plan to yield specific results in conjunction with a complete health and wellness program.
